The Future of Minority Studies Research Project (FMS) was initiated in 2000 by a group of scholars and academic institutions with a primary interest in minority identity, education, and social transformation. FMS is organized as a mobile think tank designed to facilitate focused and productive discussions across disciplines. These discussions focus on the role of higher education in a multicultural democracy and the need for an adequate conception of minority identities as the basis for progressive social change. As of 2010, the FMS Project and Summer Institute have included participants from over one hundred and ten colleges and universities.
